Besides many contributions to panel discussions and for the press, regarding these topics, he has accompanied professionally the transition from physical media exploitation to digital utilizing possibilities in several music companies, and therefore has experienced the huge discrepancy between theory and practice at first hand. Currently, he is in charge of implementing the concept of "inter-media marketing" for movies at the daredo media GmbH, which is promoting the "all-inclusive" marketing of full-length movies. The core of this approach is the reasonable combination of existing distribution forms, instead of a now still widespread commercial exploitation of different marketing possibilities (cinema, TV, DVD, VOD, AVOD), which is still mainly characterized by distinction.

Chris Anderson – Head of Film & TV: UK & Europe – MUSO, UK

MUSO's trusted technology platform is enabling hundreds of major content owners to grow their relationship with online audiences in three stages - protecting content through anti-piracy, measuring global real-time demand, and driving online traffic back towards licensed websites. Chris joined MUSO at the start, and now fronts the Film & TV arm across the UK and Europe. Starting in music, and also working in publishing, Chris has had a wealth of experience in copyright infringement and the legal distribution of creative content. He has spent a decade helping to create events including the curation of a successful music festival, he has also launched a very successful blog, and presented at a number of industry markets including EFM and MipTV. Chris is now really enjoying helping MUSO launch a series of new tools and develop their brand across the film & TV industries.
